Obituary.

Died, in Almena, Feb. 12th, 1883, Mr. Benjamin Van Auken, aged 72 years. Mr. Van Auken had been suffering for several months with rheumatism, which, together with old age, was the cause of his death.

Died, in Almena, Feb. 10th, 1883, at the house of Jesse Wilson, Miss Betsey Lincoln. Miss Lincoln was born in March, 1810, in Lower Canada, but has resided for the past 28 years in Almena. She had lived a life of industry, and was in apparent good health, till within an hour of her death.

Died, in the township of Decatur, on Sunday, Feb. 11th, Caroline Milard, aged 62 years. Mrs. Millard had been a resident of this county for more than thirty years. Dur ing the past year she has suffered as much as it would seem possible for any one to endure, but she bore it all patiently and bravely, trusting that in God's own good time she should lay the burden down and receive the reward which is promised to those who are faithful to the end. On Tuesday last her body was laid to rest on Prospect Hill, attended by a large number of sympathizing neighbors and friends. The deceased had been a widow for twelve years. She was loved and respected by all who knew her.

Our townsman John T. Clapp writes to us from Boston, under date of Feb. 11th, relative to the death of his wife, as follows:

"After receiving a telegram from my son J. M. Clapp, in New York, on Wednesday Feb. 7th, to come on immediately, that my wife was failing, I took the evening train for Boston, taking my daughter Nellie with me I arrived in Boston, after some delay, at three o'clock p. m. on Friday the 9th, but too late to see my dear wife-alive, as I learned there that she had gone to that better world, peaceful and happy, She passed away on Wednesday, Feb. 7th, at nine o'clock a. m. She had passed safely through a surgical operation, eight days before her death, and everything looked favorable for her recovery, except a slight appearance of erysipe las, and soon afterward she was taken with hemorrhage which baffled all skill. Her remains were taken to Boston, and on Satur day the 10th, she was laid in the receiving vault at Newton cemetery, near Boston. We shall probably remain here for a few days or weeks, and then return to our home in Paw Paw, and leave our dear wife and mother with her children here, to sleep in peace, and may God in his mercy guide and protect her is the prayer of her husband.

J. T. CLAPP."

The following article was penned by a very dear friend of the late Mr. E. A. Thompson, and has but recently been received by the family:

The Lesson of a Life.

When moralists wish to incite the sluggish souls of men to nobler degrees of activity they are wont to urge upon those whom they would thus fire, the emulation of the for tunate, the successful, and the renowned.

The remoteness of such lives from the every day experience of mediocrity, often cancels the lesson. Wiser it were to preach the sermons from more familiar texts, from the lives that touch our own in the ordinary transactions of common life.

The death of Mr. E. A. Thompson has called a brief balt in the march of his friends and neighbors, which may well be devoted to reflection. The tribute recently paid him in the NORTHERNER by an old friend, sketches the external history of a rare, sweet life, and On signals, Trains No. 2, 3, 6 and 7 will stop at does indeed suggest the sources of that strength which enabled him to withstand all the temptations of business and political life, and of that fortitude which enabled him to meet every form of adversity without audible murmur. Cheerfulness, patience, charity, and faith, are not the qualities which command most attention, or win most admiration, in a world where men know even their nearest friends "only in part," and where they see even these, "as through a glass, darkly."

Mutually supplemental as these qualities are, they are by no means of necessity coexistent. They are not the fruits of chancesown seed, and are not attributable to circumstances. Prosperity often produces their semblance, or at least hides their absence. Adversity does not produce them but is often urged as an excuse for their absence in otherwise exemplary characters. The most sterling attributes cannot substitute these. Integrity, courage, humility, often defy adversity and maintain themselves intact in a soul, despite her worst assaults. But these qualities which are sometimes brought into relief by adversity, do not, even combined, make a lovely character.

If, in a single word, one were asked to sum up the character of Mr. Thompson, one would needs say sweetness, loveliness. A proud man, to whom absolute independence of opinion was as necessary as air, who appreciated intellectual and social distinctions. and valued the high places in this life justly : one who could enjoy the best gifts of this external life with the best, he, the real man, was not affected by financial losses, or by the loss of place. A man peculiarly adapted by temperament to value domestic joys, of rare paternal tenderness, capable of maternal sacrifices, he saw daughters who were the objects of his fondest love, and sons who were the centers of his pride, fade out of life, and himself returned to its duties with no bitterness, with no despair. Industrious active, accustomed to be the stay of wife and children, and joying always in his ability to serve them, he saw his powers wither, his faculties fail; and he became the conscious witness of his own dependence on her whose strong support he had been for nearly half a century. Yet no impatient or repining word ever escaped him.

During the last few years, when his mental life was in the past rather than the present, his memory was haunted by none but pleas ing images. His conversation during this period betrayed a mind which had, in its strength, been always occupied with the worthy and the inspiring. No schemes for money-getting, nor political advancement, nor the promotion of material in-terests mingled with his recollections of the

The deeds of patriots, the aphorisms of sages, the songs of poets, abided with him and testified to a noble mind whose habit had been, not preoccupation by self, but reflection on impersonal interests.

He had accustomed himself to ignoring the unpleasant and the evil, and so had remained unsoured. His faith in the final outcome of good, with his consciousness of his own purity, sustained him. He had, all his life. been wont to contrast time with eternity, and he thought it only a short patience that should be as long as time. This beautiful life emphasizes many noble lessons, but perhaps none more than this, that nothing is of so great a value as the habit of discriminating between the essential and the non-essential. A soul thus taught may be stripped of all accidents, and remain even unto death, sweet and confident, like the spirit of him whose absence we deplore, but whose present freedom bids us rejoice.
